MESSAGE

I am delighted to hear of the world's biggest exhibition player, ITB Berlin, coming to New Delhi. It augurs well for the city's tourism growth and recognizes the growing stature of the city as a tourism destination among the world's bigger cities. Given the recent thrust in improving the city's basic infrastructure, it is our belief, that these will add up to providing a more seamless and pleasurable experience to every visitor to the city. The city has been emerging as a centre of diverse businesses and activities, given our eminence in the fields of education, medicine, sports, cuisines and entertainment, and not to mention age old history and civilisation, a true melting of cultures and traditions.

My government is committed to growing and adopting tourism as an economic activity that will provide meaningful employment and business opportunities at diverse economic and social levels in our society.

I believe the coming show will bring world class tourism products from all over India, and across the world, create a platform for dialogue on matters concerning the future growth of this important industry, and provide a further impetus and dedication to growth of green and responsible tourism.

(Arvind Kejriwal)
